UN Says It Isn't Certain Who Fired Fatal Round

By John Pomfret

SARAJEVO. Bosnia-Herzegovina -United Nations officials said Sunday that they had no conclusive evidence that the 120mm mortar round that crashed into the middle of the Old Town's market here, killing 68 people, was fired by the Bosnian Serbs.

But the new British commander of UN forces in Bosnia, Lieutenant General Sir Michael Rose, also said he had seen no proof to support Bosnian Serb claims that Muslim forces had killed their own people - in Saturday's calamity or in previous ones.

"The world will draw its own conclusions," General Rose said, observing that the mortar round "did exactly the same damage" as another volley fired Friday afternoon at a line of people waining for food, UN officials blamed Serbs for that hiast, which left at least eight dead,

Three United States planes evacuated about 60 of the wounded victims on Sunday. as well as 120 relatives, to Ramstein in Germany for treatment

An International Red Cross transport plane carrying wounded and family members from Sarajevo arrived at the U.S. air base in Ramstein at 7:50 Sunday night, an American military spokesman said. He said two U.S. C-130 transport planes were expected shortly afterward, carrying a total of 43 wounded. including 34 with very serious injuries, and 79 members of their families.

The confusion over responsibility for Saturday's attack, in which the mortar plowed through a thin green corrugated tool onto a hawker's table in this crumbling city's open-air market, appeared destined to muddy ef-forts within the international community to punish Bosnian Serb forces, who are largely seen as the aggressors in the war.

Several UN officials said they believed the United Nations was shying away from blaming the Serbs because of the possibility that such a step would spark military retaliation, a path many in the UN hierarchy - both here and in the UN headquarters for the former Yugoslavia in Zagreb, Croatia - oppose,

Brigadier General Charles Ritchie of the British Army, who is chief of staff of the UN operation in the former Yugoslavia, rejected that idea. He said results of a crater analysis determined that the shell was fired from a gun 1,830 meters (2,000 yards) to 3,200 meters away, "a range hracket that straddles both sides."

General Ritchie said the fact that the shell fell through a thin tin roof and landed first on a table before it bore a hole into the pavement complicated the crater analysis, which re-quires an unimpeded impact for best results. He said the high death toll occurred because the shell exploded on the hawker's table and not on the ground.

"When it hit the table with a percussion head, it exploded on contact, spraying shrapnel chest and head high." the former army mortar officer said. "That's why the effect was so utterly disastrous.

WASHINGTON - President Bill Clinton. citing harriers to military action in Bosnia, said Sunday that he hoped the shock of a deadly morrar attack in Sarajevo would spur the war-ring factions to negoniate a peace agreement. Mr. Clinton said that he had consulted with

Pentagon Plan for North Korea Attack: Take Pyongyang

PANMUNJOM, Korea - While the world is focused on North Korea's program to develop nuclear weapons, an equally serious buildup in conventional troops and equipment in the North has prompted American military com-manders to overhand their plans for detending

In the last year, North Korea has used its huge array of artillery and troops near this heavily fortified border to try to intimidate the United States and its Asian allies from dealing too sterily with it on its nuclear-weapons plans. "North Korea will be the critical, major mili tary threat for the next few years," said Lieutenant General James R. Clapper, the head of the Defense Intelligence Agency. That threat, and other military and political developments, have led American commanders to revise their approach in the event of a North Korean attack on the South.

Rather than simply driving the North's troops from South Korea, the new plan provides for a fierce counteroffensive intended to seize the North's capital, Pyongyang, in the hope of toppling the government of Kim Il Sung, American officials said. The administration has also confirmed that it

The commander of United States forces in Korea, General Gary E. Luck, has requested still other steps in the event that the negotiations over inspections of the North's nuclear sites break down and Washington and its allies impose economic sanctions.

The North has said it would consider sanctions an "act of war." Even if the nuclear issue were settled and the immediate crisis defused, the threat to the South would remain. Reflecting its concern, the Pentagon is pressing for a diplomatic initiative to persuade Pyongyang to move its artillery and forces back from the front lines in exchange for

A New System Is Budding For Cubans By Douglas Farah

HAVANA - A series of once unthinkable high-risk economic reforms, coupled with fa-vorable world prices for key commodities, are improving Cuha's devastated economy and rapidly transforming the face of the Western Hemisphere's last bastion of Marxism.

In the last six months, the government of Fidel Castro not only has allowed Cubans to use U.S. dollars openly, but also has permitted limited self-employment and has increased ag-ricultural production by giving farmers a direct stake in productivity. In addition, a growing number of foreign joint ventures and a robust tourism industry are opening Cuba to market

At the same time, world oil prices have dropped sharply and the price of sugar, Cuba's main export for hard currency, has climbed allowing scarce resources to go further.

Although no one is predicting a rapid revival and the economy, which has been subject to a stiff 33-year U.S. trace embargo, is still far from healthy. Cuban leaders, for the first time since communism in Eastern Europe collapsed in 1989, say that the economic free fall has

U.S. Foreign Policy Tug-of-War: Idealism vs. Profits Two decades ago, virtually no Americans made a living from trade with China. Today,

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The raging arguments over relations with Victnam and China are at the core of a sharpening debate in American foreign policy. In a world where every nation's motto is now Export or Die, where should the United States draw the line between its desire to export its values and its increasing requirement to export its goods?

During the Cold War, the main debate was between idealists who argued that relations with other countries should depend on their human-rights records and realists who argued that America could not afford militarily to isolate dictatorships in such places as the Philippines or Iran because their support was needed against Moscow.

Today, the idealists are still advocating imman rights. But increasingly they are finding themselves debating not with hawkish generals, but with General Electric Co. and General Motors Corp., who argue that the United States cannot afford economically to isolate the fastest growing economies, like those in China and U.S. Embassy officials identified the man as James Miller, 30, who paraglided into the ring at a Las Vegas hotel complex during the boxing match in November. He also caused a stir at a Raiders football game in Los Angeles with a similar stunt.

On Saturday, Mr. Miller landed his paraglider — a parachute powered by a fan strapped to his back — on the back roof of the palace. He then took off his jumpsuit to expose his naked body — painted green from the waist down — before running to the front of the building to give a clenched fist victory salme. He was arrested within minutes, and the police said he would be charged with five aviation officuses and one public order offense.

THE AMERICAS / CIVIL RIGHTS MELESTONE

Byron De La Beckwith arriving at court in Jackson, Mississippi. He was sentenced to life in prison.

30 Years Later, a Murder Conviction

By Ronald Smothers New York Times Service

JACKSON, Mississippi — The white su-premacist who witnesses said bragged about killing Medgar Evers three decades ago has finally been convicted of murder. He was immediately sentenced to life in prison.

Byron De La Beckwith, 73, had avoided conviction in two previous trials in 1964, when all-white juries deadlocked. But this time, nearly 31 years after Mr. Evers, the black civil-rights leader, was shot and killed outside his bome near here, a jury of eight blacks and four whites delivered a unanimous verdict of guilty after only six hours of deliberation.

The verdict Saturday closed an enduring chapter in a case that has been part of the civil-rights lore of the South, emblematic of the violence and injustice that accompanied the drive to topple segregation.

Mr. Evers, the Mississippi field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, or NAACP, became one of the best-known martyrs for the cause, and his death had helped galvanized wide support in the North for the drive to secure civil rights for blacks in the south.

When word of the verdict spread, cries of joy echoed in the hallways outside the courtroom in the Hinds County Courthouse. But Mr. Beckwith showed no emotion.

After the verdict was announced, the judge called Mr. Beckwith to the bench. "By the mandate of the law, it is mandated that I sentence you to a term of life in prison," Judge L. Breland Hilburn said.

Mr. Beckwith's wife, Thelma, shrieked and sobbed loudly after her husband left the room.

Outside, Myrlie Evers, the widow of the victim, stood before reporters and warned that she was about to throw off the veil of composure that she had worn throughout the trial. She then broke into a smile, loudly shouted a cheer and raised a clenched fist to the sky in triumph. "My God, I don't have to say accused assas-

Until a decision is made on an appeal, Mr. Beckwith will be held in the Hinds County Jail. He will be segregated from other inmates.

Under Mississippi's sentencing guidelines, Mr. Beckwith will have to serve a minimum of 10 years before being eligible for parole.

Bobby DeLaughter, an assistant to Ed Peters, the Hinds County district attorney, said that the key to their success in this case was the six witnesses who testified that they had beard Mr. Beckwith brag about killing Mr. Evers.

Among those, he said, the most telling was Mark Reiley, a 32-year-old former guard in a hospital prison ward in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, who upon seeing a television account of the trial of Mr. Beekwith two weeks ago, called the prosecutors to give them an additional and powerful account of such bragging.

Mr. Reiley guarded Mr. Beckwith in 1979. when Mr. Beckwith was in prison after a police search of his car turned up weapons and a map marking the home of the head of New Orleans Anti-Defamation League.

He said Mr. Beckwith took a liking to him and bragged about "killing that uppity nigger Modgar Evers" and about the influence he had in Mississippi that protected him from being punished for it.

Thirty years ago. Mr. Beckwith took the stand in his defense, not only denying that he had killed Mr. Evers as he got out of the car in front of his bome around midnight on June 12, 1963, but also to oroclaim his segregationist opinions. This time, Mr. Beckwith, once known for his volubility, went through much of the trial without drawing attention to himself.

The NAM president, Jerry Jasinowski, said the action came after months of fruitless negotiations with the White House aimed at avoiding a showdown with business over the issue.

Although the administration had expected opposition to its plan from small businesses, many of which offer no employee health insurance, it had included several key provisions in its plan designed to win over big businesses, most of which now offer insurance. Help on Way for 'Structurally' Unemployed

WASHINGTON - The budget President Bill Clinton will to Congress this week will take a big step toward transforming the job-training system from a social program serving the poor and disadvantaged into one designed to meet the needs of industries buffeted by economic change.

At the core of the program will be a $3-billion-a-year commitment for job training and re-employment benefits for thousands of experienced workers who have lost their jobs and have no hope of getting them back because of downsizing, defense cuts, trade agreements or

By the end of the month, the White House plans to send Congress lose their jobs because of "structural" changes in the economy.

In addition, the administration is proposing a one-stop shopping approach to unemployment services, so that an individual could go to a single government office to receive benefits and get help finding

But the key to the new emphasis on experienced workers is training. Mr. Ross said the administration would provide up to two years of training and income subsidies for individuals, who have years of training and insome subsidies for individuals who have permanently lost their jobs. Pentagon Chief Voices Concern on Russia

MUNICH - The new United Stres defense secretary, William J. Perry pledged support on Sunday for Russian reforms but said NATO would defend member states if "a new nightmare of the dark" rose from the ruins of the old Soviet Union.

In his first policy speech as de-fense secretary, Mr. Perry told the Munich Conference on Security that he shared the concern of European leaders over the fate of fledging Russian reforms and the possible resurgence of an imperial Russia seeking to regain neighboring territories.

"We have reason to fear a new nightmare of the dark in Europe if reform fails and reaction sets in," Mr. Perry said.

"What must worry us most are the developments in the lands of the former Soviet Union," he told the conference of about 200 security experts, including seven NATO defense ministers, on its second and final day.

Mr. Perry said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, through its Partnership for Peace program, would continue to develop closer ties with Moscow should Russia maintain its reform course, respect for its neighbors independence and cooperation with the West.

"If however, reform in Russia falters, NATO will be there to provide for the allies' collective defense and will already have been working through the Partnership with the active participants to promote regional security," he said. "In short, Russia has a choice,"

Mr. Perry said. "And the choice Russia makes will significantly shape the future of NATO and the Partnership for Peace." Western leaders adopted the Partnership concept for closer cooperation with Eastern Europe and Russia last month. NATO held back from offering security guarantees or automatic membership to former Warsaw Pact members to avoid upsetting Moscow. Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany, addressing the conference on Saturday, said NATO, under its post-Cold War policies, was seeking to develop cooperation with Russia that would lead to a new relationship.

MOSCOW — The fragile confidence of Russia's Jews in their ability to make a free life for themselves has been badly shaken by the rise of Vladinia and the Russia's Russia and Russia's Russia and Rus mir Zhirinovsky, the Russian ultranationalist, and the setback suffered by economic reformers in the Jewish officials and community leaders, so confident six months ago about creating a thriving Jewish life here, now speak wornedly of the need to prepare their children and grandchildren to emigrate, just in case.

They say they do not want to overreact, but must prepare for a continuing shift toward xenophobia in Russian attitudes. Pessimism about the future has risen since the

Dec. 12 elections, in which Mr. Zhirinovsky's Liberal Democratic Party received 24 percent of the popular vote.

The number of Jews deciding to emigrate has risen again, though Jewish officials here say the new increase will not show up in official figures for several months, given the need to secure the necessary invitations and permissions. The officials also expect emigration from Ukraine to rise, given the economic chaos there, "I'm sure 25 percent of the Russians who voted for Mr. Zhirinovsky believe in what he says, even if he does not," said Pinchas Goldschmidt, the chief rabbi of Moscow. Emigration of Jews from the former Soviet Union to Israel remained low in 1993, as more of the I million to 1.5 million Jews who remain have found new freedoms to live a more normal life of business and religion, if they so choose. According to the 1993 annual report of the Union of Jewish Communities in the Commonwealth of Independent States - the newly inde-

Some Jews who have embraced the new economic freedoms are now worried that it will be harder to make a decent life here, and may prefer, all concerns about anti-Semitism aside, to invest their talents abroad.

There are credible reports of Croatian and Serbian incursion into Bosnia and of Serbia's bald plans to draft its entire population into the war effort. President Bill Clinton has responded well to a situation fraught with diplomatic duplicity. He has resisted both French pressure to get U.S. troops involved on the ground and British appeals to prod the Bosnian Muslims to accept an unjust partition of their country just Europe has failed miserably in its efforts to control the war in Bosnia. The latest proof is the apparent entrance of regular forces from policy on Bosnia will not be the hostage of the competing agendas of its European neighbors. It seems that Mr. Clinton's firm stand is paying off. The Europeans are showing more flexibility. France has tried to distance itself from earlier requests to use U.S. force in the region. Last week Chancellor Helmut Kohl supported the White House position on the partition plan, saying that no party should be essured into signing on. Mr. Clinton has made clear his willingness to participate in air strikes, which presumably would involve American warplanes stationed in Italy or on aircraft carriers in the Adriatic. But the main White House push should be to lift the senseless arms embargo. It should also support trade sanctions against Croatia unless Croatian troops are withdrawn from Bosnia in double-quick time.

Opening Up to Vietnam

The trade embargo had come to represent the last self-imposed restraint on renewal of American relations with Communist Vietnam. Ostensibly, the embargo had been kept on strictly to ensure Vietnamese cooperation in searching for Americans still regarded as missing in the Vietnam War, which ended for the United States in 1975. But unquestionably Americans needed time to come to terms with a conflict that had taken 58,000 American lives, convulsed American politics and society and ended in an unprecedented American defeat. The reclaiming of a vestigial honor was rightly seen to lie in a due respect for the MIAs. Vietnam played on this American preoccupation in the bargaining, delaying for years the lifting of the embargo that President Bill Clinton announced the other day.

As men of the right, Ronald Reagan or George Bush could easily have taken this major step toward normalization, had the MIA and Cambodia issues been ripe. But as one who opposed the war in his student days and avoided military service, Bill Clinton needed an even larger showing of Vietnamese cooperation. It took him a year, but he got it, last year in Cambodia, where Hanoi supported a peaceful denouement, and now with the MIAs, where he promises to keep looking. Mr. Clinton also needed, and got, a full measure of support across the political spectrum at home. A president who premises his whole foreign policy on adjusting to the global economy said he had refused trade hriefings so as to emphasize the exclusion of trade considerations from his embargo decision. But of course there are trade considerations. Vietnam's ardent interest in the economic openings to which only Washington has the key provided crucial leverage. Vietnam is poor, still unrecovered from its war wounds and shackled by a system of lingering central planning. However, it has a large population (70 million) whose energies many Americans came to respect in the war. Expectations of quick and fancy profits court disappointment, but business opportunities do exist, plus opportunities for regional accommodation. On its part, Hanoi is especially eager to enlist the American strategie weight against its traditional rival, China.

As things go along, some Americans will be drawn to explore common buman ground with the former foe, Many, we hope, will try to see to a widening of the tiny space now available in Communist Vietnam for human rights. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Stew of Hate

Religious and racial bigotry oever recede entirely, witness the ebb and flow of Klan membership in the past century. Over a much shorter historical cycle, the candidly racist Nation of Islam has waxed and contracted in the 60 years since Elijah Poole, son of a Georgia preacher, changed his name to Elijah Muhammad and took over leadership of the sect.

Starting in the days when they were known in the white press as the Black Muslims, the group has posed problems for mainstream civil rights organizations. Martin Luther King Jr. criticized their espousal of violence, bot he couched that criticism carefully for fear of disrupting black political solidarity.

Throughout the years, whites have repeatedly challenged officeholders and Christian nisters in the black community to repudiate the Nation of Islam. Black leaders have often responded that while they do not share the group's philosophy they also understand, with sympathy, that it is rooted in the rage produced by two centuries of oppression. Why, they ask, should the Congressional Black Caucus repudiate this group when the white Southern Democrats in Congress never got around to denouncing George Wallace, Lester Maddox and Ross Barnett? It is also fair to point out that while the Senate denounced Louis Farrakhan, minister of the Nation of Islam, by a 97-to-0 vote, there was no stampede to discipline Senator Ernest Hollings for telling a racist joke about African diplomats.

The one thing that America's collective experience with racism has shown is that it cannot be conquered with tit-for-tat grievance counting. Jesse Jackson is right when he calls for an end to the "rhetoric war." What is needed is an astringently intellectual, morally grounded repudiation of higotry whenever it occurs and from whatever source.

The response must be all the more thorough when the racism is systematized around fictional ideas like Mr. Farrakhan's pseudo history that casts Jews as America's main slaveholders. This is anti-Semitism raised to a psychotic level.

Several millennia have taught Jews about the dangers of being scapegoated. They know that psychotic hatred can transmute into government policy with frightening speed. That is why hlacks and non-lewish whites may not fully understand Jewish concern when a handful of college students respond favorably to the ohviously wacky hate-mongering of Mr. Farrakhan and his mouthpiece, Khalid Abdul Muhammad.

Mr. Farrakhan's phony "discipline" of Mr. Muhammad was a diversion, as was Representative Charles Rangel's unworthy argument that the Anti-Defamation League had elevated Mr. Muhammad by exposing him. For Mr. Farrakhan to say that Mr. Muhammad is being demoted because be used internperate language to express "truths" about Jews is to deliver insult rather than apology. Representative Kweisi Mfume of Maryland, head of the Congressional Black Cancus, properly disowned his ill-advised "sacred covenant" with the Nation of Islam. He should also renounce, root and branch, Mr. Farrakhan's antiwhite, anti-Semitic, auti-Catholic, anti-gay message, as should Mr. Jackson and Benjamin

Chavis, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In return, black organizations and leaders have a right to ask for heightened white sensitivity to the commonplace discrimination o everyday life and to the tocreasing tolerance for parlor - and campus - prejudice against blacks. The nanoo is far removed from the national teach-in on race that occurred during the 1950s and '60s. To spread that experience to new generations, Mr. Jackson has called for a White House conference on racial and gender equality and religious tolerance. Such a gathering could lift Americans above the current fencing over whether denunciations have been fast and frequent enough to a new dialogue about bigotry. Thirty-five years ago, Ralph McGill warned against the evil stew created when the racial dialogue is left to "hate-filled minds." He was denouncing white Klansmen who claimed the sanction of history to bomb a synagogue in Atlanta. The anti-Semitic ravings of the Nation of Islam leaders, under the sanction of distorted religion, represent the same kind of threat.

Cynthia Tucker, the forceful black woman who now occupies Mr. McGill's chair as editorial page editor of The Atlanta Constitution, observed on Friday that while skilled hatemongers are always too smart to commit crimes, they incite lesser minds to act out the violence implicit in their words. She warned, "When the wolves of hate are loosed on one people, then no one is safe."

Stop Pretending the Chinese Gulag Isn't Really There

S TANFORD, California — The fear, horror and brutality that movie audiences see depicted in "Schindler's List" are daily fare in China's forced-labor prison camps, the world's largest instrument of political repression. More than 10 million people remain in their grip.

While Beijing needs the hard currency that comes from preferred trade status, it seems more deeply interested in keeping the truth about the gulag from the world. Despite reams of contradictory documentation, it denies that exports products made by forced labor.

When Bill Clinton decides in June on renewing most-favored status for China, one criterion will be Beijing's compliance with a U.S.-Chinese accord that prohibits the importation of products made hy convicts, whether through forced labor or not. Lacking real teeth, the accord is worthless. U.S. officials have requested five visits to camps, and only one, which took place last month, has been permitted. It is not yet clear whether the camp had been sanitized to climinate any indications of forced labor.

I was arbitrarily thrown into the camps in 1960 without a trial, and spent 19 years in them. was just a student, not an activist, but was labeled a "counterrevolutionary rightist" in 1957 in a political campaign handled for Mao Zedong by Deng Xiaoping, the current supreme By Harry Wu leader of the Communist Party. I had antagonized the authorities by condemning the Soviet invasion of Hungary in 1956.

I learned that the only way to survive was to become inhuman — not to think, not to feel. I was repeatedly tortured and nearly died from starvation and exposure to freezing tempera-tures. I are anything I could find, learning to catch and devour frogs, snakes and rats.

My family disowned me so that they would not be further persecuted by the government; to this day, I cannot speak with family members in China for fear that they will be barmed.

I was released in 1979 and came to America in 1985. In writing my memoirs, I realized that I was speaking for the millions of ordinary people who died in the camps and remain nameless, faceless, unknown to the outside world. They are gone, but they must not be forgotten, and those who still labor under these brutal conditions must be defended.

These ordinary people, among them workers and religious believers, are still locked away as political prisoners, along with common criminals; they are forced to work or starve, a practice that violates international law and basic decency.

The camps and their victims have not been given adequate attention by the American govenment and people. Americans remain outraged over the Nazis' forced labor camps and Stalin's. Why haven't the American people and world leaders, President Clinton among them, condemned the camps? A few political prisoners have been freed. In the next few months Beijing no doubt will let a few prominent dissidents out as a sop to Mr. Clinton. The administration recently announced that U.S. officials would be allowed to take guided tours of a few camps, but these surely will be model camps — Potemkin villages.

Beijing and the International Committee of the Red Cross are discussing Red Cross visits to camps. But remember, in the 1930s Hitler let the Red Cross into concentration camps and it found nothing wrong in them.

The politically expedient in the administration and on Capitol Hill will argue that substantial progress has been made on human rights.

Merchants will argue that the United States

Academics and business executives will restate their inaccurate assertion that capitalism will lead to democracy in China. I have yet to meet American businessmen in search of chean labor who are sympathetic to eliminating the camp system. They can make money, don't have to worry about labor mious, environmentalists or any of the other halimarks of representative democracy. Their only com-plaint is with the rampant corruption.

Yes to an American Role in Peacekeeping, but With Conditions

WASHINGTON — The debate over United Nations peace-keeping is healthy, for peacekeeping involves American resources and pres tige and can involve American lives.

The rise of regional and internal conflicts poses difficult issues: What obligations does the international community have in such conflicts? What U.S. role is consistent with U.S. interests? The administration has completed a policy review that will help ensure that our peacekeeping ef-forts are selective and more effective.

Peacekeeping has served U.S. interests in Cyprus, Sinai, El Salvador, Cambodia and elsewhere. It can advance our interests and foreign policy goals by dampening conflicts that threaten allies, giving breathing room to fledgling democracies and provid-ing equitable sharing of burdens. More than 90 percent of United Nations peacekeeping troops come er countries; almost 70 percent of the cost is borne by others. Unfortunately, there have been many problems with UN peacekeeping. Let us be clear: Peacekeeping is not at the center of our foreign or defense policy. Our armed forces primary mission is not to conduct peace operations but to win wars. The bottom-up review of our post-Cold War defense requirements ensures that we remain prepared to do that.

We will never compromise military readiness to support peacekeeping. Nor would we hesitate to end our engagement in a peace operation if that were necessary to concentrate our forces against an adversary in a major conflict.
This administration has no intention of transferring troops into a standing world army. There may be occasions when the president determines it is in our interest to place U.S. personnel under temporary foreign operational control, as in NATO and Desert Storm. But the president will never relinquish his constitutional command authority over U.S. troops.

The fear that the administration would subcontract its foreign policy to any power or person is unrealistic. to any power or person is unre-So is the notion that we should abandoo peacekeeping altogether.

The administration will continue and expand regular consultations with Congress on all aspects of our peacekeeping policy and will discuss with the Congress ways of working together when there are possible deployments of U.S. military units in UN peace operations.

There are four main elements to our policy. First, we are asking tough questions before voting for a peace operation at the United Nations and will ask even tougher ones before we involve U.S. forces. What is the threat to our interests? Is there a clearly defined mission? A distinct end point? How much will it cost? Are the resources available? What is the likelihood of success? As the president said at the United Nations, we have begun asking such questions before voting in the Security Council. Second, we will work with the other UN members to establish a more equitable sharing of peace operations' costs. Our current share, more than 30 percent, results from a formula set in 1973. The world has changed, and we want to reduce our share to 25 percent. Third, we and other UN members are working to bring modern managent and financial accountability to UN peace operations. There is no doubt that the United Nations is overextended. We have proposed extensive reforms, including the creation of a modern communications center and logistics support system, that will en-able the United Nations to plan and carry out peace operations effectively.

Fourth, we will outline a new division of responsibility for peace operations between the State and Defense departments. (The Pentagon would have primary management and fi-nancial responsibility for UN operations that are likely to involve combat.) And while we will not designate separate peacekeeping troops, we will ensure that our forces receive appropriate training for peace operations.

We are realistic about the limits of peacekeeping. As we see in Somalia, peacekeepers can create an opportumity for peace, but the responsibility for the future of a society must always rest with its own people. Can the United Nations build nanons for others? No.

Can we let the United Nations become a dumping ground for conflicts that the warning parties themselves lack the will to resolve? No.

Do UN peace operations always benefit the American people? No. Should we then throw away an

This year, as we have advanced our major foreign policy goals - promoting open markets, renewing our security, supporting democracy — we have acted alone when necessary. because the British press is a major reason. More than 80 percent of the daily oewspaper circulation in Britain consists of tabloids. The headline "Up Yours Delors" is well known. Less well known is another, from the day when a statue of Air Marshal Sir Arthur "Bomber" Harris was unveiled by the Queen Mother. Not surprisingly, some German tour-ists mildly boood. "Hun Scum Boo Queen Mum," thundered The Sun, Britain is not the only European country to have tabloids, but it has more of them and they are more viru-

Of the daily broadsheets, two foreign absentee landlords control more than half the circulation. They both detest the European Union, and their editorial staffs have pandered slavishly to this whim. Facts are never allowed to get in the way of a good story ridiculing anything which goes on among the Wogs south of the Channel.

During the Danish debate on the Mass-tricht referendum, much was made of a Commission regulation setting out the curves required in cocumbers for packaging. Firmly fixed in the minds of most of their editorial writers is the doctrine of PEWFAA — Protectionist Europe, Wicked French and Angelic Americans. Why one can hear the constant question over the scratching of their pens — have decent fellows like the Brits got entangled with this Continental lot, with their crazy Common Agricultural Policy, and the wicked French always dreaming up more knavish protec-tionist tricks? sidies and indeed any trade-distorting practice are as foreign as sin to a newborn child.

No one dates to mention that on agriculture any French government faces a million farmers. In Britain, 50,000 coal miners humiliatingly propelled a British government into economic loonyland.

No one chooses to mention that the United States gives subsidies on a major scale to its dairy farmers, that its restrictions on Sugar imports damage poor countries in the Carib-bean to the profit of rich sugar producers in the United States, and that agricultural pro-duction in the western third of the United States would hardly be possible without a massive federal irrigation subsidy. This daily portrayal of fantasyland has its effect. It divides Britain from the Continent. It damages British interests there. And it inevitably distorts the view which the world superpower has of Europe. Americans need to realize that most of the British press, for diverse and not very respectable reasons, chooses to depict Europe as the land of the Wizard of Oz, with John Major as Dorothy and Jacques Delors as the Wicked Witch. International Herald Tribune.

In This Caricature of America, Everybody Skates Away Scot-Free

T OKYO — All over Asia, people are completely fascinated with the U.S. Olympie figure skating scandal. This is partly due to the powerful melodramatic pull of a real-life mys-tery story amid the glamour of world-class sport. Beyond that, though, the Tonya Harding case has proved irresistible because it seems to confirm all the worst stereotypes that people overseas love to hold about America. Viewed through the prism of the feisty Asian sports newspapers never reticent about reporting on the darker side of U.S. society — the assault-ou-ice is just another example of modern-day America at work: a country where the concept of fair play lost out long ago to sheer greed: a country where violence emerges as the solution to every problem; a country where even an ice skater nowadays dare not go anywhere without a pair of hurly bodyguards and a battalion of lawyers.

Lately, the overseas image of America, drawn from a number of recent trials, has focused on the idea that it is a place where you can do whatever you want - and get away with it.
You can kill your parents while they are eating ice cream in front of the television set. You can ravage your wife. You can main your husband. You can pull out a gun big enough to kill a grizzly bear and blow the life out of an innocent 16-yearold foreign exchange student who rings your doorbell on Halloween. You can do any of those things and then find an American jury that will let you get away with it.

For the most part, this is a protesque parody of the United States, probably inspired in large part by resentment and jealousy of a country that now stands as the military, economic and cultural colossus of the world.

But that dangerous, decadent America — a country where no had deed goes punished — is the America that the foreign media love to portray. And if Tonva Harding gets to represent America on the U.S. Olympie team, she will go to Norway as the personification of that America Like other world-class skaters. Tonya Harding devoted buge chunks of her life to the hard work of perfecting her skills. With dedication and diligence, she overcame personal and athletic difficulties. She developed a style that combines agility and power to a degree that few skaters anywhere can match. If it stopped there, Americans could be proud to have her represent them in Norway.

But Miss Harding also developed an acute sense of victimhood. If anything went wrong, it was somebody else's fault. She was always being cheated. She made that point over and over in interviews, and it came through loud and clear to the mugs and ex-cons she surrounded herself with. Much like Henry II ("Who will free me from this turbulent priest?"), she set the train of violence in motion, then denied responsibility when those around her took the hint.

To some foreign media, that flight from responsibility is the most American thing about the whole sordid business. The Tonya Harding case helps us to understand," a reporter on Japan's TBS-TV network declared breathlessly one night last week, what a big difference there is between the United States and Japan in the con-cept of personal responsibility."

The Japanese cannot resist comparing Miss Harding to their own favorite skater, Midori Ito, who was Asia's greatest hope at the 1992 Winter Olympics. Like Miss Harding Miss Ito is a muscular, dynamic skat-er better known for athletic prowess than lithesome grace. Like Miss Harding she mastered the triple and hop-ing that it would be her ace against aller, more elegant competitors.

While her whole nation watched with bated breath, Miss Ito launched an all-out drive at Albertville for the gold medal. In her final program she tried not just one but two triple axels; she nit one perfectly and missed the other. The effort proved good enough to edge past one American competitor - a graceful brunette named Nancy Kerrigan — but she still ended up in second place, behind America's Kristi Yamaguchi. When the medals were awarded, Miss Ito stepped before the cameras to speak to the television audience back home. She gave her countrymen a deep, apologetic bow, "I humbly apologize," she said, "It was my fault. Compare that with Tonya Har-ding's regular chorus of "I wuz robbed!" when things don't go her way, and you can see why Japan be-lieves there is a "big difference" when it comes to personal responsibility. In fact, one of the big differences at work is determining the level of re-sponsibility that Miss Harding should be held to. Many Americans. judging from opinion polls, have de-cided that she should be entitled to a spot on the U.S. team unless she meets the criminal definition of responsibility. That is, unless she is proved guilty of something covered by the criminal law, she is innocent enough to represent the United States in the Olympics.

"Innocent until proven guilty" is one of the majestic glories of Ameri-can jurisprudence. Enshrined in law by men who knew the terrors of the Star Chamber and the royal bill of attainder, it was designed to protect an individual's liberty and property against the unjust whims of govern-mental power. But this minimal stan-dard was not designed to confer honor, privilege or the right to represent the United States on the world stage. "Not yet indicted" may be the appro-priate criterion for deciding whether somebody ought to be in jail, but the picking of America's Olympians has traditionally involved something more than this bottom-of-the-barrel test. The Olympics involves concepts like teamwork, fairness and responsibility.

Figure skating is called an "individual" sport, but at the Olympic level it is anything but. Any world-class skater has a team of coaches, assistant coaches, chorcographers, costume designers, media advisers, managers and even, God forbid, bodyguards. The skater is the head of the team, and if the team wins, the skater quite fairly gets the credit. By the same token, if the team cheats, as Miss Harding's team did, it seems only fair that the skater should bear the responsibility.

If an athlete is given an unfair advantage over her competitors, that is normally enough to keep her out of the game. When they give those ran-dom drug tests at the Olympics, no-body asks whether the athlete knowingly took the drugs. If you have an unfair advantage because of steroids, you're out — even if you insist that yon didn't know what your coach was stirring into the oatmeal.

Tonya Harding's team got an un-fair advantage in a reprehensible way — through deliberate violence against a competitor. She knew about it — at least after the fact and lied to cover it up.

Now some people argue that this is irrelevant unless it can be proved beyond a shadow of doubt that Miss Harding knew beforehand the dirty tricks her team employed to help her win. Whether or not she had "prior knowledge" may make a difference to a grand jury. In Olympic terms— that is, in terms of sportsmanship the point is irrelevant. The sophisticated New York liberals who sat around the bar at Plaine's and decided that Tonya Harding should be the object of their sympathy are really saying that folks who live in trailer camps in Oregon don't understand concepts like honesty and sportsmanship. She's only a poor

giri from a broken home, the critists say, so you shouldn't expect her to play fair, to tell the truth to the FBI, or to express regret about a fellow skater's misfortune. In fact, most people in Oregon, like most other Americans, understand perfectly well what fair play is all about. The scores of ordinary working-class Americans who will represent the Olympies sent their country at the Olympics this month are people who have lived all their lives following the rules, telling the truth, and accepting responsibility for their own actions.

But if Town Washing

But if Tonya Harding is permitted to wear the uniform with the American flag at Lillehammer, the foreign press will pay no attention to all those sportsmen from the United States. For the world's media, the only American at the Olympics will be the one who seems to stand for the notion that in modern-day America was can do seems. modern-day America you can do any-thing — and skate away soot-free.

Paris Seeks NATO Ultimatum: Lift Siege or Face Air Strikes

By Roger Cohen

PARIS — France said Sunday that an emergency NATO meeting on Bosnia would be held within the next 48 hours and that it should set an ultimatum: Lift the siege of Sarajevo or face the military power of the Western alliance.

Amid a chorus of horror and indignation from European leaders over the mortar-shell attack oo Saiurday on the main Sarajevo market, which killed at least 68 people, Foreign Minister Alain Juppé said Serbian forces ringing the Bosnian capital must be withdrawn to at least 30 kilometers (18 miles) and all heavy arms of the beltigerents handed over to UN troops.

"If these two demands are not met," said Mr. Juppe, who was flanked by Defense Minister Francois Leotard, "then all means, ineluding air power, must be de-ployed to ensure they are." He declined to say how much time the ultimatum should allow.

Foreign Ministry officials said Mr. Juppe had spokeo three times to the U.S. secretary of state, Warren M. Christopher, over the weekend, and the Western response to the mortar attack, the worst single attack of the 22-mooth Bosnian civil war, was being closely coordinated between European governments and Washington.

But the French officials also said that while the United States had agreed to the NATO meeting, likely to be held in Brussels shortly fter a meeting of European Union foreign ministers on Monday, the idea of an ultimatum was a French proposal to which the country's NATO allies had not yet given a final response.

"Ultimatum is a very strong word, but it is appropriate to use it at this stage," said an adviser to Mr. Juppe. "What patience remained to Western capitals has disappeared as a result of this attack." appeared as a result of this attack." Nonetheless, several problems appeared to remain with the

Another problem, as French Defense Ministry officials conceded, is that any NATO air strikes in Bosnia seem likely to provoke Russian anger. Serbs are traditional allies of the Russians. Moreover, there are 3,000 UN

The German government issued its strongest call yet for air strikes in Bosnia. Chancellor Helmul said, "The use of selective militar measures like the ones NATO offered to the United Nations on Aug. 9, 1993, must oo longer be its weaknesses. Some Pentagon officials say that fuel shortages have limited large-scale training. They also question whether North Korean commanders could effectively coordinate such an attack in the face of allied air superiority.

Still, because so much of the North's artillery and other forces are close to the border, the allies might have as little as 24 to 76 hours' warning of an attack, an American military official said.

The plan also embodies new army doctrine, which emphasizes aggressive counteroffensives instead of static defenses. U.S. and South Korean forces would try to slow the North Korean ground assault north of Seoul, buy time while reinforcements pour in and then repulse the invaders.

But the major change is in the next step of the contingency plan: U.S. and South Korean forces would cross into North Korea after beating back the North's forces and occupy Pyongyang. With an eye to Chinese sensitiv-

Socialist Defeats Defense Aide for Finnish Presidency

By Lee Hockstader Washington Post Service

HELSINKI - A diplomat with no experience in domestic politics won the Finnish presidency Sunday, capitalizing on voter disenchantment with traditional politicians and a struggling economy.

With 99 percent of the ballots counted, Martti Ahtisaari, a 56year-old Social Democrat, had received 53.8 percent of the vote to defeat Defense Minister Elisabeth Rehn, who had 46.2 percent in the rumoff election. About 82 percent of the Finnish electorate voted.

Mr. Ahusaari is a seasoned dip-lomat who has held high positions at the United Nations, including undersecretary-general for administration and management. At the UN, he was best known for over-seeing Namibia's transition to independence from South Africa in 1990. But he had never run for public office at home and was not a well-known figure in Finnish poli-tics when he declared his candidacy for president last March:

Nonetheless, in first-round voting last month he placed first in a field of 11 candidates, besting politicisms who are longtime fixtures in Finnish politics. Mrs. Rehn placed second in the Jan. 16 ballot, which led to the runoff Sunday.

advantage in the late stages of the campaign, saying he would appeal to the government to spend more to reduce unemployment.

Under Finland's constitution, the president has some influence but little actual control over economic questions. His real power is in the field of foreign affairs, which also happens to be Mr. Ahtisaari's area of strength.

He is a strong supporter of Fin-land's application to join the European Union a move that would the the country's economy closer to Europe's. Such a move would have been untimkable during the Cold War, when Finland avoided any alignments that would provoke

Shortly before the runoff elec-tions, Mr. Ahtisaari said that in any new European security order, "care should be taken not to leave Russia

Mrs. Rebn, the 58-year-old de-fense minister, also supported EU membership. She was seen as slightly more conservative on fiscal matters, but in most respects the two candidates were not regarded as far apart on the issues.

A member of Finland's small thnically Swedish minority, Mrs. Rehn was supported by many young people and professionals, who saw her as a competent professional and a fresh face who would represent Finland's interests well. But she seemed to tire in the campaign's late going as Mr. Ahtisaari improved his performance in televised debates and public perfor-

Somalia Pullout: Envoys, Too? Marines Warn of Risks if Diplomats Stay

By Barton Gellman

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — With U.S. forces counting down to a March 31 withdrawal from Somalia, the Clinton administration is divided over whether to leave a small diplomatic contingent behind in Mogadishu, whose safety Marine Corps officers say they cannot guarantee.

The proposal to keep diplomats there, approved last month by a senior interagency group, comes amid extraordinary efforts to prevent casualties as the 14month humanitarian intervention winds down.

U.S. commanders are so preoccupied with security that they have banned Americans from most roads in Somalia and are transporting them out of the country on a leased Greek cruise ship for fear that transport aircrast would be shot down.

A U.S. Marioe survey team concluded after travel-ing to Somalia last month that "violence will rapidly escalate" with the departure of U.S. forces and that a platoon of 50 troops cannot ensure the safety of a diplomatic outpost there.

Major Michael T. Edwards, operations officer for the Marine battalion that protects State Department posts around the world, wrote 10 Ambassador Richard W. Bogosian that his security platoon's "capability is not sufficient for continuing operations past 31 not sufficient for continuing operations past 31

He predicted that Mr. Bogosian would require emergency evacuation from Mogadishu within 30 to 60 days if he remained after the U.S. pullout.

Though considered alarmist by some military and civilian leaders, the memorandum has received cabinet-level attention.

Weighed against the safety risks are strong political and policy motives to leave a diplomatic team in place in the Somali capital. State Department officials contend that they would have a valuable role in helping broker a reconciliation among warring clans.

Other officials say the withdrawal of diplomats would make a mockery of President Bill Clinton's assertions that the United States is leaving Somalia because its work in restoring security is largely done.

All participants in the debate agree that with only a platoon of troops, even the highly trained Marines of the U.S. Navy's Fleet Anti-Terrorism Security Team could be quickly overpowered if Mohammed Farrah Aidid or other warlords wanted to do so.

The disagreement is over the likelihood of a major threat and the ability of remaining United Nations troops to protect against it. troops to protect against it.

Those discounting the threat point out that the United States has recently agreed to provide tanks, Cobra helicopter gunships and armored troop carriers to the contingents from developing countries that are scheduled to remain in the 20,000-strong UN force.

UN Scales Down Mission

Julia Preston of The Washington Post reported from the United Nations in New York:

The Security Council has given UN peacekeepers in Somalia a new, limited mission that will substantially reduce UN operations there after U.S. troops pull out. In issuing a mandate for the UN force in Somalia to run through March 1995, the Council retreated from aggressive, sometimes combative peacemaking operations it has tried in the three years under Secretary-General Button Rutton Ghali General Butros Butros Ghali.

The decision signaled a return to the more cautious. neutral role the organization traditionally had played. Under the new mandate, peacekeepers will aim mainly to protect humanitarian aid deliveries outside the capital, Mogadishu. UN troops also will no longer for the land of the capital of th

The decision on Friday to stress intra-Somali peacemaking and to avoid further efforts to impose peace showed that most of the nations with troops in Somalia were dismayed and exhausted by the UN confrontation with General Aidid and wanted a less controversial stance for the peacekeepers.

She also likes Sweden, citing "superior economic fundamentals of nearly 2 percent growth, 3 percent inflation and a current-account surplus."

Henrik Melph at IBI International in London said he expected the spread of 100 basis points between 10-year yields on Swedish and German debt to narrow to around 30 basis points by year-end. He also predicted the krona would appreciate against the mark.

Given the prospect of a long period of uncertainty in the U.S. market and the vision of high income plus possible capital gains plus protection against mark weakness, analysts at J. P. Morgan & Co. and Salomon Brothers Inc. predicted American bond investors would follow the lead of U.S. equity investors and diversity into Europe.

U.S. investors in fixed-income securities have lagged in diversifying internationally, these analysts said, largely because the domestic market has provided such easy profits until now. Both groups of analysts said they considered the move was potentially large enough that, if unhedged, it could keep a lid on the dollar's rise.

At present, however, bond investors appear cautious about new commitments. The only real enthusiasm is for short-term dollars, preferably floating-rate notes that provide protection against rising rates, and high-quality short-dated paper such as the two-year notes issued last week by General Electric Capital Corp. It was priced to yield a scant 2 basis points over U.S. government paper.

Merrill Lynch & Co. is to this week begin marketing a global bond for Turkey, which will be seeking up to $750 million for between five and 10 years.

Mr. Perna said the small rise in the federal funds rate, which is what banks charge each other on overnight loans, was not sufficient to impede economic growth.

The Fed's move, meant to prevent inflation by cooling demand for loans, will raise some borrowing costs, analysts said. Much of the effect will be in adjustable-rate mortgages, they said. The signal of an end to the long period in which interest costs did not rise would like-See STOCKS, Page 11

U.S. Shines in European TV

Forget Culture, Think Money, Expertise, Distribution

By Richard W. Stevenson New York Times Service

PARIS - It is a busy day at Hamster Productions, one of France's most successful relevision programming makers. Pierre Grimblat, the presi-dent, is putting the final touches on the musical score for "L'Amour Est un Jeu d'Enfants." a movie for Canal Plus, the French pay-television service.

Production is about to begin oo an installment of "Navarro," a loog-tunning police series that is among the top-rated shows on TF1, the biggest French station. "We are story makers and story tellers," said Mr. Grimblat, evoking traditions France has fought to defend against what it views as American cultural imperialism.

Yet Hamster is one-third owned by Capital Cities/ABC Inc., the parent of the ABC television network and one of the largest American media companies. Capital Cities/ABC does not interfere with Hamster's creative decisions, but the companies work closely in almost every other way. from exchanging scripts to hunting for acquisitions. "There is no day when we doo't say, What would ABC have done?" Mr. Grimblat said.

They are so modern and so knowledgeable about the international destiny of television.

France may have won a great victory in the world trade talks late last year by heading off U.S. demands for the European Union in drop its quotas and subsidies and throw open its markets for movies and television programs. But Europeans are just recognizing the scale of a quieter but more far-reaching American invasion, one that has seen companies from the United States infiltrate nearly every corner of the European television business. As far as television goes, the GATT oegotiations may have missed the point. No longer does the U.S. entertainment industry view Europe simply as a place to sell what Hollywood makes.

from Time Warner Inc. in Turner Broadcasting System Inc., Tele-Communications Inc., Viacons Inc., Walt Disney Co., Cox Cable Communications, US West Inc., General Electric Co.'s NBC, Capital Cities and others are rushing to invest in the fastgrowing European television industry.

In European broadcasting, American media ex-ecutives see a business that is being transformed rapidly by its evolution from an era of state owner-ship to an age of commercial television and everincreasing viewing choices.

They see a huge need for money, for technical expertise and for programming — all of which U.S. companies can provide. And they see a huge market — 350 million people in the 12 major West European nations, and 650 million overall west of Russia.

In most cases, American investments have been made through joint ventures with eager European partners and in full compliance with limits oo foreign ownership. But there is oo doubt that U.S. companies are playing an increasingly influential and potentially sensiove role in Europe by virtue of owning all or part of the pipelines through which programming s delivered, as well as by having a hand in making the programming itself.

The possibility that dominance of dismibution networks by Americans will ultimately squeeze ont domestic programming has created an environ-ment in which a backlash seems increasingly possi-

Last fall, France and Belgium barred Turner Broadcasting from distributing a service on their national cable systems, asserting that they not meet European Union requirements that a majority of programming be locally produced.

Hosokawa Faces Summit in U.S.

TOKYO - Leaders of Japan's eight-party ruling coalition appeared on Sunday to have agreed to reach a compromise economic stimulus package by Mooday that would enable Prime Minister Mori-hiro Hosokawa m go m Washing-ton for crucial trade talks with a reflacionary, tax-cutting package.

Kyodo news agency said the commitment followed a warning from Akira Yamagishi, head of the Rengo labor union grouping, that the "endangered Japanese econo-my could sustain lethal damage" if the tax situation were left undecid-

The coalioon has been shaken by three days of political turmoil since Mr. Hosokawa's annnouncement Thursday of a new 7 percent valueadded tax to finance huge income tax cuts.

The prime minister unveiled his so-called "welfare tax," intended in be levied from 1997 on all goods and services, without consulting some of his chief allies. His largest partner, the Social Democratic Party, threatened to walk out, effectively stripping him of a governing majority. Mr. Hosokawa later agreed to set the proposal aside.

Coalition party chiefs went in work to hammer out a compromise that would rescue the stimulus measures and ensure that Japan is oot bumiliated when Mr. Hosokawa meets President Bill Clin-ton at Friday's summit meeting.

He needs to be able to show Mr. Clinton the package and a draft budget for the fiscal year beginning in April to prove Japan's willing-oess in meet U.S. demands for it in boost spending, encourage more imports and help slash its buge trade surplus.

Tomiichi Murayama, the Socialist chairman, and other alliance leaders said they would urge Mr. Hosokawa to go ahead and include planned direct tax cuts in the anorecession package he must an-nounce by mid-week.

Bringing It Home To Buy a House Money From Hong Kong Boosts Real Estate Prices

Bombay speculators are counting on at least one group of inves-tors weighing the future prospects of India against China to drive the local real estate market to still greater heights.

With wide economic reform under way and full convertability of the rupee likely within two years, investment flows from expatriate Indians scattered around the world are expected in gain strength.

Any difficulties for Hong Kong's Indian business community could hasten the process. Many people of Indian descent who live in Hong Kong approach its 1997 return to Chinese rule with trepidation, particularly as some could find themselves stateless if forced to tion, particularly as some count must member to the British colony.

As such, news that Indian investors based in Hong Kong were behind a recent record price for a plot of land — nearly double analysts' predictions — has set the Bombay property market alight.

The sale "has upset all calculations of developers here and opened unlimited possibilities of the market going haywire," the Sunday Times of India reported.

most foreigners would expect, but deals in recent months are taking prime residential prices to Tokyo and Hong Kong levels.

New apartments being built by the National Center for the Performing Arts to the specifications demanded by Indians who have lived abroad recently brought about 21,000 rupees (about $700) per square foot. There is talk they could hit 35,000 rupees, keeping up with rapid escalations elsewhere in the crowded city.

"I bought my place less than two years ago for 14 lakh (1.4 million rupees)," said Ashok Agarwal, general manager of Buena Vista Television (India) Ltd. "I could sell it today for 45 lakh. But what good is the money in me with prices going higher?"

How to Drive Them to Soft Drink?

Despite a difficult history in India, global soft-drink makers still have a thirst for deal-making and expansion.

Coca-Cola Co., back in India after a 16-year exile imposed because it refused to reveal its secret drink formula or divest 60 percent of the company, recently paid $60 million for Parle Exports Ltd., the makers of Thumbs Up cola and other trinks.

Now, according to several reports, at least four multinational beverage manufacturers are wooing Duke's, which controls major sections of Bombay's market. Some simple arithmetic explains the scramble. In the United States, an average person consumes 265 servings of soft drinks annually; the world average is 80. In India, where more than 250 million people have been identified as middle class, the average is three cans or bottles per person a year.

Negotiating With the New Raj

Living down the saying "India has potential; India will always have potential," is partially in the hands of the Bombay Club, a group of powerful business executives who first gathered in September in the Belvedere Room at the Oberoi Hotel.

Indian commerce welcomed the end of the "license raj," the permission system centered in New Delhi that interfered with oearly every aspect of business management. Executives also have savored the prospect of tax reductions, a fully convertible rupee and the chance to invest in the strongest of state-owned businesses due for privatization.

But a loss of protection from foreign competition and capital has stirred some of the country's most powerful businessmen into action as India begins to ignore self-reliance in favor of global competition.

Arguing for a "level playing field," a group led by a scooter maker, Rahnl Bajaj, and an office equipment manufacturer, B.K. Modi, is lobbying for more time and greater means to prepare for a new era of competition in a largely closed market of 900 million people.

They don't want protection, but foreign investors should not find it easier than they do," said K.K. Modi, elder brother of B.K. Modi, who heads the tobacco, tra and television divisions of the surawing family company.

Local businessmen want changes to capital gains taxes that now favor international investors, regulations that cap foreigners' holdings in businesses and a slower pace of opening to direct investment.

Chile CEO Forced Out In Copper Scandal

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatch SANTIAGO - The chief executive of the world's biggest copper producer, the state-run Chile Copper Corp., resigned on Saturday as the result of a scandal over $206 million in losses on futures trading. On Friday night, Alejandro Noemi, the chief of the company. released a preliminary internal audit that blamed senior managers for al-lowing Codelco's chief trader to run up the losses.

On Saturday, the government said that President Patricio Aylwin had accepted Mr. Noemi's resignation and had appointed the deputy economy minister. Jorge Rodriguez, to replace him.

Mr. Aylwin has ordered a judicial inquiry into the case.

The losses were accumulated by Juan Pablo Davila, the chief trader, who has resigned since the scandal broke. Mr. Davila told his superiors two weeks ago that the losses had begun when he confused a buy and a sell order. To cover up, he said, he began speculating in futures con-tracts on international metals markets, and made 5,000 trades between last September and January.

But the losses grew. Mr. Noemi said on Friday night that Mr. Davila had run up losses of $164 million in copper contracts, $31 million in silver contracts and $12 million in gold trades.

In addition, Mr. Noemi said, Codelco was responsible for open futures contracts that would represent a loss of $100 million if they were closed out at current prices.

Mr. Noemi had consistently denied the losses were a result of fraud. But on Friday night, he said nothing could be ruled out, "Every day I am considering a new viewpoint," he said.

The preliminary audit said Mr. Davila had exceeded limits on his trading that allowed him to expose the company to losses of up to $1 million. The audit further said there had been a lack of supervision by his superiors and by Codelco's finance department.

Codelco's head of sales, Owen Guerrini, and his deputy, Carlos Depsch, have resigned as well.

Mr. Noemi said Codelco's board was never informed of a change in policy in October 1990, when Mr. Noemi authorized Codelco to act as a trader for the first time, speculating by buying and selling futures not backed up by the company's own production.

Tightening Will Flatten the Curve Thursday and 4.10 a week earlier,

The Federal Reserve Board chairman, Alan Greenspan, announced Friday a slight increase in short-term interest rates at the conclusion of the Federal Open Market Committee's discussion of monetary policy. The Fed's new target for the federal funds rate, the rate at which banks lend each other money overnight, is 3.25 percent, 25 basis points up from the 3 percent that had been the target since Sept. 4, 1992.

The Fed's move "will ultimately benefit the long end and flatten the yield curve," said Robert Bannon, who watches the central hank for the consulting firm IDEA.

The idea is that the Fed's vigilance about the potential for inflation in the future will reassure investors in longer-term U.S. Treasury securities. These investors normally demand a yield premium for holding paper with maturities 10 or 30 years out. Inflation erodes the value of any fixed-income security.

NEW YORK — The first increase in short-term U.S. interest Dec. 21 Meeting Set the Stage

WASHINGTON - Policymakers of the Federal Reserve System, divided over the degree of inflationary threat, decided not to push up interest rates at the Federal Open Market Committee meeting on Dec. 21.

The FOMC left that move for last week's meeting.

The FOMC left that move for last week's meeting.

Minutes of the December meeting were released on Friday after the normal six-week delay. They showed that two of the Fed governors, Wayne Angell and Lawrence Lindsey, voted against the neutral Fed stance at the meeting. They were protesting what they felt was a sluggishness by the central hank in heading off potential inflationary pressures.

They believed that momentum policy was overly accommodative and

Mr. Angell's views finally prevailed last week, an ironic development because he is leaving the Federal Reserve Board this week and did not attend the latest meeting.

attend the latest meeting.

The Fed policymakers laid the groundwork for Friday's interest rate increase in December, saying that when they pushed up rates, they should make their move at an FOMC meeting, not between meetings, for fear of upsetting financial markets in thin year-end trading.

Indeed, shorter-term U.S. Treayield spread between the two-year spread, which widens in response to fears of inflation, was 213 points just a week earlier.

The last time the spread hrushed the 190-point mark was in October. at the height of the long bond rally.

The benchmark 30-year bond sury securities suffered the heaviest fell % of a point, or $7.50 per $1,000 losses in Friday trading and the key bond, to close at 98 17/32 Friday. The yield was 6.36 percent, up 6 note and the 30-year bond narrowed to 196 hasis points. That est yield since the close of 6.41 percent on Jan. 3. The record low is 5.77 percent, set Oct. 15.

The 2-year note fell 2 12/32

the highest since January 1993. "The tightening is going to be relatively good for the long end and people are putting in flattening trades." said Jaz Singh, vice president at Sanwa-BGK Securities. He said the tightening "cannot be just a psychological move," but the start of a new tightening cycle.

"It's not 25 basis points that will make a difference." he said. "The long end had been expecting a tightening and it's reassuring not to have to deal with uncertainty.

Investors in longer Treasury securities had been growing concerned that the Fed might remain too accommodative too long and let inflationary pressure huild up as the U.S. economy picks up steam. This uncertainty had played a role in the performance of the long end since November, as a year-long rally ran out of gas.

"I think it would have been disturbing for the long end if the Fed had not done anything," said Marc Wanshel, vice president and econemist at J. P. Morgan Securities.

"There is some initial reaction in which the entire market is going to be hurt," he acknowledged. "But in the sense that the market is confipoints to 99 E/32. Its yield surged to 4.4 percent from 4.27 percent on benefit the flattening of the curve."

Condemed from Page 9: markets Friday indicate bond prices will keep falling. This is a further response to disappointment at the Bundesbank's failure to cut interest rates last week

The state of the s

United Engineers

The quarter-point increase in rates by the Federal Reserve Board on Friday can only feed fears that the pace of Bundesbank casing will be slowed. A slowdown in the pace of German rate cuts would cloud prospects of economic recovery that are forecast for this year. This risks upsetting equity markets in Europe, which have assumed the recovery is just around the corner. Another worry for European stock markets is what the U.S. rate rise means for the heavy flow of American money that has plowed into and fueled the increase in local stock markets. Will this flow now be halted? Will it be reversed? "Markets are headed for a possibly vicious correction," Simon Crane, a London-based trading adviser, asserted. Still, for now he sees nothing more than "a class out" after a long period of rising asset prices "that will set the stage for the next leg of the rally." While U.S. stock prices reacted sharply, with the Dow Jones industrial average off 96 points, analysts note that the bond market kept its cool. The yield on 30-year government bonds on Friday rose a scant 6 basia points, or hundredths of a percentage point, while that on 2-year notes moved up 13 basis points. But the relative stability of the long term rate, which is most influential on investment decisions, was taken as a sign that America's in-vestment-led business recovery is not in jeopardy.

Nevertheless, prospects are high that uncertainty will continue to mil U.S. markets as analysts warn the Fed's increase is only the first in Marc W. Wanshel at J. P. Mor-

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BEHTNG - China, as part of its drive to cool the economy, has capped expansion of its stock markets at 1993 levels, the official Peo-

The brokerage made a killing on inside information last year when a real estate company from Shenzhen, Bao An Enterprises, leunched a hostile raid on Shanghai Yanzhong Industrial.

Honda Warns of Pullout From Rover

- LONDON (Renters) - Honda Motor Co. may pull out of Rover Group if Rover loses its British status as a result of control by Bayerische Motoren Werke AG, Honda's chief executive said Sunday.

The executive, Nobuhiko Kawamoto, said on television that if Rover becomes only a joint venture with BMW, and Rover thereby ceases to be a British company, our cooperative relationship with Rover will not last Honda has 20 percent of the car operations of Rover, which was sold by British Aerospace PLC to BMW for £800 million ($1.2 billion) last week. BMW's chairman, Bernd Pischetsrieder, asked what it would mean if Honda walked away, replied: "I think it would mean for Honda as well as for Rover tremendous losses and I think it would be irresponsible to accept this." But he said BMW wanted Honda to stay and added, "I would obviously assure them as well that we will respect their interests."

GM Has Little Profit to Share in U.S.

CHICAGO (Reuters) — Jack Smith, chief executive of General Motors Corp., has said that most of the company's U.S. workers will not receive profit sharing checks this year because GM's core North American operations did not recover sufficiently in 1993.

"I don't want anyone declaring that we're all fixed. We still have work to do," he said on Saturday at the Chicago Auto Show, Analysts estimate GM's North American auto operations had a loss of more than $1 billion last year, after interest, taxes and special items. That was an improvement from a loss of $4.5 billion in 1992.

Malawi to Ease Exchange Controls

BLANTYRE, Malawi (AFP) — Malawi will dramatically ease exchange controls on Monday to stimulate growth and exports, Francis Pereka Moyo, governor of the central bank, has said.

Importers will no longer have to apply to the central bank for foreign exchange approval, Mr. Moyo said, while regular exporters will be allowed to open foreign-currency denominated accounts with the bank.

Norman, Recovered. Wins by 1

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

PHUKET, Thailand (AP) Australia's Greg Norman, too sick to even lift a club the day before competition began, won the John-nie Walker Classic golf tournament Sunday, beating Fred Couples by Norman, who said he picked up a long infection while playing in the Dubai Classic last month, shot a course record 8-under-par 64 in the third round and carded 68 on Sunday over the 7,049-yard, par-72 Blue Canyon Country Club course for a total of 277.

By edging Couples — who held or shared the lead for the first three rounds — Norman also moved up from No. 2 to take over Nick Fal-do's position as the world's No. 1 golfer in the Sony rankings. Faldo. from South Africa, failed to make the cut Friday at the halfway point.

Comples shot 70 Sunday for a four-day total of 278. Bernhard Langer also shot 70 and finished third, two strokes behind Norman. Ian Woosnam, tied with Couples for the lead after three rounds, shot 73 to take fourth at 281.

Norman said his foture plans inchided more play in Europe.

"I would like to play the Scottish Open because I have not played there," he said. "I am going to play five tournaments in Europe, 18 in the States and one in Japan." In Pebble Beach, California, the script has read like something out of Ponce de Leon's travel diary. You want the fountain of youth? Find 17-Mile Drive in Carmel and take the winding road up to The Lodge at Pebble Beach.

First it was Arnold Palmer, 64, charging into the picture on Thursday with a 69 and then it was Tom Watson, 44, shooting the lights out on Friday, and on Saturday it was Johnny Miller, 46, rediscovering his game and shooting a 67 that put him just one stroke out of the lead come into the final round of the going into the final round of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-

"It wasn't the building," said UCLA coach Jim Harrick. "They just played good and we didn't. We were on our heels all day."

Indurain to Skip Tour of Spain, Use Giro as Tuneup to France

MADRID — Top Spanish rider Miguel Indurain will skip the Tour of Spain for the third year running in order to concentrate on the Giro d'Italia as a build-up for the Tour de France, the coach of the Banesto cycling team has said. Indurain's decision casts a cloud of uncertainty over the prestigious team's participation in the Tour of Spain, with the race organizers having hinted that if the three-time Tour of France winner does not ride, the team will be excluded.

"The Giro is not Indurain's aim," said Banesto's coach, look Minnel Echangeri "His gating season turns on the Jose Mignel Echavarri. "His entire season turns on the Tonr' in France.

We would never put a possible victory in the French race at risk," Echavarri added, explaining that if Indurain took part in the Tour of Spain in April, he would peak too soon to be able to maintain his top form for the Tour de France.

 Joachim Halupczok, 27, Poland's former cycling world champion, has died of heart failure while warming up for a soccer match, the PAP news agency reported Sunday. He won the amateur road race title at the world cycling championships in Chambery, France, in 1989.

• Fred De Bruyne, 63, the leading Belgian cyclist in the 1950s, died Friday in the south of France, Belgian BRT radio reported Saturday.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIR-CHEN, Germany - Alberto Tomba, getting better as the Winter Olympics get closer, won the last slalom before the Lillehammer Games by more than a secood Sunday ahead of Tomas Fogdoe. The Italian, who led Fogdoe by 0.72 seconds after the first run, produced the third-fastest second run on the Gudiberg course to win the eighth slalom of the season and post his second victory in a row. Tomba, who won the Jan. 30 slalom in Chamonix, France, was the only skier to break 46 seconds in the 58-gate first run, clocking 45-95. He posted a time of 46.52 in the 62-gate second heat for a win-

Tomba's fourth slalom victory of behind Ingemar Stemmark's 40.
His 33 career World Cup victories make Tomba the fourth most successful World Cup skier. Stenmark has 86. The 100 points Tomba picked for his victory moved him to sec-ond place overall in World Cup standings, and extended his lead in slalom standings.

Fogoe, the Swedish slalom World Cup champion last season, who also finished second to Tomba in Chamonix, posted a time of 1:33.58, 1.11 seconds back.

Jure Kosir of Slovenia, fourth after the first run, moved up one place to finish third in 1;34,21 after breaking a ski tip on the first run. Peter Roth of Germany, who had the fastest second run, jumped from 10th to fourth, while his teammate, Arming Bittner, was fifth. Thomas Stangassinger of Austria, third after the first run, dropped to ninth. Tomba, 27, is the only Alpine skier to win consecutive Olympic gold medals in the same event, the giant slalom in 1988 and 1992. He also won the slalom title in 1988. Tomba fell after crossing the fin-

Bidders for 2002 Games To Be Reduced to 2 or 3

The Associated Press

III.LEHAMMER, Norway
International Olympic Committee officials have agreed to cut the number of candidates bidding for the 2002 Winter Olympics to a group of two or three finalists. A record 10 cities have submitted bids for the Games. With the vote set for June 1995, the IOCs executive board decided Saturday that the bidding and selection process would be too costly.

There are too many candidates," said the IOC's director general, François Carrard. "On one hand, it's positive for the Olympic movement. But on the other hand, it's extremely difficult to have 10 candidate cities, with the expenses and the load of work that will be done in vain.

Carrard said the executive board approved a plan to select two or three finalists by mid-January of next year. They will be chosen by a special panel consisting of mem-bers of the executive board, one representative each of the international federations and national Olympic committees, and the chairman of the IOC evaluation

The final selection will be made as usual by the full IOC. Any members of the executive board who come from the bidding countries will be ineligible to take part in the pre-selection process.

The group would try to reach a consensus based on an objective assessment to select the finalists, Carrard said. If not, there would have to be a vote."

The proposal goes to the IOC session next week for final approval, which is considered a formality. The change was instituted only for the 2002 vote but could serve as a basis for future bidding selections. Carrard said.

The move is aimed at reducing the costs and travel involved in the bidding and selection process. Under the current system, cities spend millions of dollars promoting their bids while IOC members travel around the world at hoge expense to visit the candidate cities. Some of the bids have little chance of success and are considered trial runs for a later attempt.
The 2002 candidates are Salt Lake City, Utah; Aima Ata, Kazakhstan; Graz, Austria; Jaca, Spain; Ostersund, Sweden; Quebec; Sion, Switzerland; Sochi, Russia and Tarvisio, Italy. Salt Lake City was a loser to Nagano, Japan, in a close vote for the 1998 Winter Games and is viewed as the favorite this time. A record number of athletes and countries will take part in the Winter Games, the IOC said. The IOC sports director, Gilbert Felli, said that 1,990 athletes from 66 nations had registered for the Feb. 12-27 Games.

That breaks the record of 1,871 athletes from 65 countries set at the 1992 Games in Albertville, France. Arne Huuse, commander of the Olympic police force, said 2,770 police and military personnel will be in place starting Monday — five days before the start of the Games. The figure represents one-third of the total Norwegian police force, although it's much smaller than the 8,000 security personnel deployed during the 1992 Games in Albert-ville, France.

The cost of the Lillehammer police operation is about $50 million. Huuse said the police will have five helicopters, 400 cars and 50 police dogs, including eight bombsniffing dogs imported from Northern Ireland. The force also includes an anti-terrorist unit, hostage negotiators and bomb squads.
All food consumed in the Olympic village will be inspected, and mad for VIPs will go through X-ray

A "The Coup," John Updike tried to stretch the bounds of his fictional territory by abandoning the American suburbs for the wilds of Africa. In conjuring up the imag-nary kingdom of Kush and its impe-rious leader Colonel Ellellou, he created a novel that aspired to be both a Nabokovian comedy of manners and a wickedly samic exploration of cultural myths. A similar leap of imagination seems intended in his latest novel, "Brazil," set in a myth-cal version of South America. The result this time, however, is a decidedly unhappy one. Couched as a retelling of the Tristan and Iscult legend, "Brazil" begins as an arch fairy tale and ends as a modern-day soep opera full of racial and sexual clichés. It does for racial understanding what Updike's bitter por-traits of women in "The Witches of Eastwick" and "S" did for communication between the sexes.

In Updike's telling, Tristan is Tristão, a 19-year-old hlack street kid, who believes in the magical workings of fate. Iscult is Isabel, a spoiled upper-class white girl, who rebels against her family's code of privilege. The two tecnagers meet on the beach in Rio during the 1960s and instantly fall in love.

In typical Romeo and Juliet fashion, their families denounce the romance. Isabel's wealthy uncle declares the affair beyond the bounds "even of our permissive age, in this rive society. all-too-progressive society."
Tristão's mother, a prostitute who has borne numerous illegitimate children, also rebuffs Isabel's efforts to befriend her. Their respective worlds - Isabel's world of money and ease, Tristão's world of poverty and despair - are mecha contrasted and compared. When the lovers my to start a new life on their own, they are pursued by thugs hired by Isabel's father. Fearful that Tristão will be killed, isabel appears to relent: She bids her lover goodbye and enrolls in college.

notes that he took the tone of "Brazil" from Joseph Bédier's "Ro-mance of Tristan and Iscult" and "courage and local color from truly Brazilian fiction" of writers like Clarice Lispector, Rubem Fonseca, Jorge Amado and Nelida Piñon.

PARIS — He is known, like a sports hero or a rock star, by his first name: Joseph. The word has even entered the language of style. "Very Joseph" describes to fashion's cognoscenti an airy space, cool in both senses of the word. It will be filled with graphic modern clothes, mostly in black and white like the wardrobe of the impish man himself.

Joseph Ettedgui — to give him the name he inherited from his Moroccan-French parents - came to London 27 years ago, went into hairdressing, offered his clients a few clothes (inevitably in black and white) and from there huilt an empire of style. You only have to peck into the tiny cafe in the flagship store Joseph opened three months ago oo the Avenue Montaigne, to Tastemakers 📆 An occasional series about people for whom know that you are at modern fashion's pulse beat. The people who sit there — designer Michel Klein uses it as his canteen - look like they walked out of his stylish (black and white) catalogue. Would anyone dare to walk into the store in a shocking pink jacket or the wrong red

"It is not at all like that - I want a background of black and white but I love to see red in the middle of it," says Joseph, to refute accusations that his style focus encourages fashion fascism. "I like to mix the sublime and the cheap, to put drill with cashmere. But to do a shop, discipline is very important."

You find the 11 Joseph stores in Paris, London and New York, plus Cannes, in the south of France. The style he pioneered has spread like ectoplasm across the fashion universe — all large plate glass windows revealing nearly folded clothes against matt-gray walls and gleaming

It is hard to separate the reality of Joseph's achievement as tastemaker and style-setter from the myth. He contributes to the legendary accounts of his pursuit of retailing perfection by telling a story about himself; When Donna Karan asked him to lunch in the London store Harvey Nichols (where he designed the cafe) Joseph dedicated the morning to rearranging the stock in his shop, changing the music tapes, freshening up the flowers and "taking away the clothes I didn't think Donna would like." She greeted him by telling him she adored his shop — which she had visited the day before.

Joseph Ettedgui: A fondness for black and white.

Joseph's exceptional place in the fashion world comes from keeping one eye on emerging talent and the other on customer needs. The designers be has picked up at their modest beginnings include Kenzo whom he made a fashion star in London in the 1970s - and Azzedine Alaia, whose talent he nurtures with fanatical loyalty. "I love to work with people who give me all the ingredients," says Joseph, who finds it easiest to buy from designers he knows personally. He describes the rare moments of parting company (he recently fell out with Kenzo's organization) as "like a di-

At 55, Joseph continues to add to his Corbusier black chair became a monster because there were so many rip-offs. So I immediately decided to wear white!"

The Avenue Montaigne store ("my hid-den dream") and the London flagship on Fulham Road are lotty temples to designer clothes. But Joseph's strength lies also in the collections of simple knitwear and clothing designed to respond to his clients'

"So many people pay attention to the big labels and what is going to impress, but the bread and butter is a cheap let-down," he says. "I give much more attention to the gray flannel trousers, the plain sweater and the good raincoat that people wear all the time and I display them with the same respect as the designer clothes."

Ah, the display! Somehow Joseph has succeeded in creating in the chilly would of modern retailing stores with a soul. It may be just the bowl of white tulips in a glass vase with crystal-clear water that you know a hapless assistant must change twice a day. Or the eclectic and stylish objects: Horst's classic fashion photographs sleekly framed; a splash of paintbox color for the home wares that have been part of the stock since Joseph opened Pour la Maison in London in 1985. He says that be and his wife Isabel have a borror of minimalist fashion stores without a burnan touch.

Joseph's critics accuse him of elevating ordinary things - stone-washed silk shirts or day-gray knits - to fancy status with fancier prices. Eashrining objects you might find elsewhere if you had the time and taste is often the point. But in a business known for bitchy rivalry, Joseph's visitors' book (another at-home touch) contains generous comments from competing retailers who stopped by to check out the store.

By the time they have absorbed his latest ideas, he will probably have moved on. There is a restless changing round of stock and even decor - one London shop went from high tech to new brutalism in six months. Joseph's earliest memories as a child in Casabianca are of his grandmother, "an extraordinary eccentric," pushing furniture from room to room across the speckled marbled floor with its mosaic

Joseph's father was a furnishings retailer, and quirky echoes of Morocco come in whimsical furniture displayed like art objects in the Paris store.

"I remember going into Dean and De-luca [the Manhattan deii] and seeing the eyes of people shining when they saw let-tuce or cheesecake and chocolate cake," says Joseph. "In my shops, I want to get

On the Horns of a Dilemma

WINDERSON — Toward the end of "Meet the Press," where I occasionally come on to shoot the wounded, we were discussing Whitewatergate. David Broder of The Washington Post took issue with my suspicious of heavy financial scandal ahead. "If you told me that Bill Clinton was very horny or very ambitious," Broder opined over the NBC network, "I would have no trouble believing it. If you told me that he was money-hungry and was criting corners for he was money-hungry and was cutting corners for money, I'd say that doesn't sound like the Bill Clinton

When the show ended, the Pulitzer Prize winning reporter and columnist looked around and innocently asked: "Can you use a word like horny on television?" The only answer was yes, because he already had. But has horny crossed the line from stang to colloquialism, from mild vulgarity to acceptable informal usage?

First, to the roots. Horn can be traced to the Latin cornu. The proto-Germanic harna bloomed in Old English in "Beownlf," around the year 725. The riginal meaning referred to the hard protuberances growing from the head of ungulate mammals or mythic creatures like the saryr, a bestial being combining a goat (undeservedly vilified as a lecherous beast) and a human. The poet James Russell Lowell, extolling the virtues of hard work, wrote in 1843: "Blessed are the horry hands of toil!" Hard-working fishermen today prize as heat the North American hearthfead chub prize as bait the North American hornyhead chub.

Now to the point. A horn is hard; it is shaft-shaped; since the 15th century, it has been used as a symbol for the male's erect sex organ. "No horn could be stiffer."
John Cleland wrote in "Fanny Hill" in 1749; earlier. Shakespeare used the term horn-mad in "Much Ado About Nothing" and other plays to mean both "lecher-ous" and "cuckoided." The nose "horn" of the rhinoceros has long been believed to possess aphrodisiac quali-ties, which led to the endangerment of the species. "Homie is an 18th-century Scottish term for 'dev-reports Alan Richter, author of the 1993 Dictionary of Sexual Slang, which itself is another old term for penis, dating back to Boccaccio. Robert Burns refers to audd hornie, meaning the devil, and old horny is also a 19th-century term for penis. But plain old horny, meaning 'sexually aroused,' only makes its debut at the end of the 19th century, originally applied exclusively to males." Henry Miller, in his 1949 "Sexus," turned it into an equal-opportunity word with "Her thick, gargling voice saying [raunchy bit deleted] 'I'm horny.'

That brings us to today: Do we use horny in everyday speech, along with its Scottish synonym randy, to "sexually aroused"? Yes; it's common usage, and it has lost much of its taboo. Next question: Should we use the term in family newspapers or on television talk shows? In my opinion, no; common usage is not necessarily good usage, and horny has not lost all its taboo. My colleague Broder caught himself, and asked about it. What is natural in dramatic dialogue can be jarring in more

Instead of "if you told me he was horny," try "if you told me he played around a lot." (In formal newspaper writing, of course, you could not use play around, except in a quotation: you would have to use terms like promiscuous or the fuzzier, less judgmental sexually active, or, if referring to a specific state, security

Relatedly, the word penis appeared a few paragraphs back, and it did not bother you. That standard English word has been thrust into everyday speech by the trials of John and Lorens. Bobbitt. "Her crime," the New York Times editorialist wrote, "serves as permission to say a bald anatomical word in newscasts that Howard Stern only recently appropriated for talk radio." The writer didn't need to use the word, but pents was used in the paper 12 times in the opening weeks of the year, compared with no uses in the same period last year. - 17

Once more unto the breach, dear friends: Recause I cannot be sure that this piece separating borniness from godliness is going to make it through the shrieks, growns, hoo-boys, and turtuits that are part of "the editing process," I might as well go all the way. Here comes more than you need to know about the part of shall not pred to know about the part of shall not pred to know about the part of shall not be to the pa more than you need to know about the part of the body that daring novelists used to refer to as "his manhood" that daring novelists used to refer to as "his manhood". The word penis, according to the Barnhart Divionary of Etymology, is from the Latin penis for "hair and is cognate with the Greek pear and Saniskrit penas, from the Indo-European pes-/pasPenis surfaced two years ago in our living rooms in the Clarence Thomas hearings during Anita Hill's testimony, which also necessitated exhaustive etymological research into the slang synenym dang in this space. The word penis resurfaced in Michael Jackson's videotape statement defending himself from charges of child molestation, and became part of life's daily language in the avid coverage of Lorena Bobbint's trial. Don't blame the messenger, the clear, standard, direct way of describing messenger, the clear, standard, direct way of describing what happened was "she cut off his penis"; only on second reference could it be "an act of sexual mutilation" or "her attempt to remove his manhood."

We have come a long way in a short time, thanks to television, in removing a sense of shame in using the right word. Time was, a few courageous parents would eschew all haby-talk terms and accurately identify the part to their children, only to blush furiously when their children, only to blush furiously when their chief freely used the "climical" word to other adults.

We've come a ways in journalism, too. In a new book, "My Times," John Corry wrote about a New York Times article on the subject of sex: "It had been their death of the sex country for the subject of sex: decided that my story could remain as it was except for one word. That was penis. Vagina was acceptable, but penis had to be replaced by 'male sex organ.'

The times, they are a-changin'. July 13, 1993, will be remembered as the day the word penis appeared in 30-point type in The New York Times.

Standard English has no dirty words. The word penis — severed or reattached, flaccid or erect — is as innocent, and as usable in polite company, as the hornybead chub.
